Plungers.

Ordinary people who follow steady callings, who do the common, commercial work of the day, never plunge, but with their financial genius your case is different. He plunges often enough, taking down plenty of money to steady his course, and if he fails to bring any pearls for those who trust him he never fails to produce the oyster shells. The successful financial plunger is the idol of the times. From him proceed those gigantic schemes for railways, monetary companies, and other speculations which make the fortune of hundreds.

On the Stock Exchange, plunging transactions are common enough. Even art is not free from these erratic performances. The age demands sensation—"headers" lead the way for plungers. In pictures we believe the practice is in its infancy, the general aspect of the Academy, for instance, this year not being in the least suggestive of force of vehemence of any kind. There is one paper in which plunging leaders may be read every day. They are popular enough, those quaint literary exercises, with a certain set of people, who accept them for considerably more than they are worth.

There are numbers of men and women with almost uncontrollable tendencies toward vagabondism. You will find such people constantly in social perplexities, and now and then enveloped in a cloud of scandal. Mr. Lever, in his recent novels is particularly successful in depicting them. They are to be found at all foreign bathing-places—at Nice, at Mentone, at Florence, at Baden, at Homburg. Some of these plungers have gone down so far that they are never able to lift again their heads above water. Society does not altogether forgive a man for running away with his neighbor's wife, or for having bailed notoriously in his house, and being sold up.

The plunger can lay claim to that bold quality recognized as "dash," which often carries the possessor through difficulties which would overwhelm weaker or more scrupulous persons. But, besides that, he or she must be in the extreme cases entirely unembarrassed by domestic ties or feelings. The leap once taken, the plunger must not look round. And from all one can discern, this class of people is not the most unhappy. You will find a thoroughly virtuous, faithful father, husband and taxpayer, with gloom on his countenance and troubles scored on his forehead, while plunger is taking his ease at some one's expense under a thought or care for the morrow. He cannot be said, either, to be a mere adventurer, for he continues to plunge with as much regularity as any other business would impose on its follower, and he manages to subsist on the product. Who does not know a man among his acquaintances whose visible means have long ago disappeared, and who still continues to drag on in a mysterious fashion without a breakdown or a disaster of any kind, and who really seems to thrive and fatten upon his ruin?—London Review.

Nashy says that he and Deekin Pogran will represent "The Corners" in the National Democratic Convention, and that he has had the untimely out in front of "Bacon's" every night for a week training "us" to be enthusiastic over the nominee, no matter who it is or what platform he is put onto. He first started a cheer for Chase and Morrissey, but the name of the first stuck in their throats. Finally, however, he prevailed upon them to cheer for Chase, Brick Pomeroy, and "Eckal suffrage." A. Johnson, Mayor Monroe, reputation, "Fernando Wood and death to niggers," Fred, Douglas, Pendleton and no taxation, general amnesty, and, in fact, anything he proposed they accepted.
